CIA Official To Be Brown Professor

Lyman B. Kirkpatrick Jr., executive director and controller of the Central Intelligence Agency, will become a professor of political science at Brown University in September, it was announced yesterday.

Mr. Kirkpatrick will teach a course on the operational aspects of the Cold War and later a course on national security policy.

A native of Rochester, N.Y., Mr. Kirkpatrick has been working with the CIA since after World War II. Last year he received the President's Award for distinguished federal civilian service. This is the highest award that can be given to civilians for federal service.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is a 1938 graduate of the school of public and international affairs at Princeton. After his graduation he worked as a journalist with the U.S. News Publishing Corporation.

During World War II he served with the Office of Strategic Services and as an intelligence briefing officer. In 1945 he was discharged as a major holding the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, the European Theater Ribbon with five battle stars and the French and Belgian Croix de Guerre.

In 1962 he became executive director of the CIA and for two years has been executive director and controller.

"We look forward to his arrival," Professor Elmer E. Cornwell Jr., chairman of Brown's political science department, said. "Mr. Kirkpatrick will draw on his extensive experience in the world of practice to complement the theoretical and scholarly approaches to political science," the professor added.
